The last Ms. Growson—Mr. Growson, or as I am going to call him, Captain Growson, of the Fresh, has been credited with a large share of the success of the venture. The three vessels, it is true, sailed from the same port in the same month, but the success of the Fresh is entirely due to the enterprise of Mr. Growson. The Fresh embarked on an adventurous voyage, and the captain, with his crew, was considered to be a bold and adventurous seaman. The Fresh made a circuit of the world, and come to anchor in two different ports. The first was the West Indies, where the crew received a warm welcome, and the second was Amsterdam, where the ship was received with open arms. The crew were then allowed to land, and to enjoy the advantages of the place.

The Fresh was then sent on another voyage, and
success of
venture has
attributed to the enterprise of Mr. Growson.
